Last lines dicated by T. H.
referring to George Moore and
G. K. Chesterton

Also a pencilled note by himself about my biography.

F. E. Hardy.

Epitaph.

Here lies nipped in this narrow cyst.
The literary contortionist
Who proved & never turn a hair
That Darwin's theories were a snare
He'd hold as true with tongue
in jowl.
That ~~Ptolemy's~~ Nature's geocentric rule

. . . . . true & right
And if ~~such~~ one with him could not see
He'd shout his choice word
'Blasphemy'.

Jan 1928

On a ~~man~~ who thought no other could write such English as himself.

Epitaph.

"No mortal man beneath the sky
Can write such English as can I
They say it holds no thought my own
What then, such beauty (perfection) is not known."

Heap dustbins on him:
They'll not meet
The apex of his self conceit.

Jan. 1928

(Materials for Life of T. H.)

There may be a chapter at the end entitled "Anecdotes & Reminiscences" — which may contain details of that nature for which no place has been found at any particular date in the book.